COVID-19 has impacted the grading policies of schools. The Department of Education has updated its grading policy for the current academic year. The new policy aims to provide a more flexible and supportive framework for students and teachers. The grading scale has been modified to reflect the challenges posed by the pandemic. Students will now be evaluated based on a range of factors, including coursework, projects, and teacher assessments. The goal is to ensure that grading is fair and reflective of each student's effort and performance. This update is intended to support students as they navigate through these unprecedented times.

For families, the NYC Department of Education provided a summary of the grading criteria for various grades. The summary includes criteria for academic progress, school attendence, and the importance of GPA. It also mentions the availability of remote learning resources and strategies for parents to support their children's learning at home.
